Code of Ethics

Members of the Midwest Sociological Society subscribe to and are bound by the Code of Ethics of the American Sociological Association.

To read the Code in its entirety, please visit the ASA online at www.ASAnet.org and follow the link to “Ethics.”

MSS members are reminded that sexual or racial harassment is unethical in any professional setting, and that the annual meeting of the Midwest Sociological Society constitutes such a professional setting. Instances of harassment should be reported as soon as possible to the Professional Issues and Standards Committee.

WELCOME

to Omaha and the 2006 Annual Meeting

Springtime greetings and welcome to the 67th annual meeting of the Midwest Sociological Society in Omaha, Nebraska. Given that it has been nearly three decades since the Society has held its meetings in this heartland city, we hope that you spend some time discovering its charms in the nearby “Old Market” district, between and betwixt the exciting and intellectually stimulating sessions that we have organized. As you peruse the program, you will see that we have a full spectrum of sessions, including regular, invited, roundtables, keynote, plenary, workshops, tours, musical, and other social events.

When we were brainstorming for the theme of this year’s meeting, it was our intent to present an idea that would speak to the fullness of the sociological enterprise, something that would engage all members in terms of intellectual imagination, sociological scope, and applicability to any endeavor in which our membership engages. In selecting the “art of sociology” as our theme, we hoped to engage your creativity, focusing on the various ways that our discipline embraces the genres, tropes, methods, and ideas from our brethren in the arts and humanities. We wanted to see how social science can bridge the gap between us and other artistic forms of expression, while still being firmly lodged within scientific pursuits. We hope that you find our thematic sessions speaking to these concerns.

There are several highlights toward which we want to address your attention:

(1) The opening keynote address Thursday afternoon by the esteemed scholar, Elijah Anderson (University of Pennsylvania), titled “Poor, Young, Black, and Male: A Case for National Action” will build on his award-winning books Streetwise and Code the Street to elucidate the situation that African-Americans face in our inner cities today. (2) Robert Benford’s Presidential Address on Friday evening, “The College Sports Reform Movement: Reframing the Edutainment Industry,” will speak to attempts made by professors and administrators at our leading institutions of higher education to change the culture of college athletics in the United States. As an outstanding scholar of social movements, Rob will bring theoretical perspectives to shed light on this group’s efforts. (3) Saturday evening, David Snow (University of California, Irvine), who for personal reasons was not able to attend last year, will be here this year presenting the Peter M. Hall Lecture Series on the topic of “Framing Processes, Discursive Fields, and Politics.” If you are familiar with Snow’s landmark work on social movements scholarship, you know that we are in for a special treat.

In addition to these sessions, you will find informative and sociologically relevant tours of the city of Omaha, the Nebraska Correctional Facility, and the nearby Gallup University. There are also a dozen workshops, covering issues ranging from modes of teaching, writing and publishing, grantsmanship, methodology, and administrative and professional issues. Further, the MSS has come to be known for its collegiality and social events, and this year will be no different. There will be plenty of times for schmoozing, eating, drinking, and simply meeting old and new friends in a variety of settings and scenes.

WELCOME

to Omaha and the 2006 Annual Meeting

To orient you to this program, please allow us to point out what follows in these pages. In the front matter you will find a listing of plenary sessions, tours, workshops, co-sponsored sessions, list of committee meetings, and various other special events, including receptions with free food. The Program Summary will be useful to you in planning your daily schedule. It lists the day, time, and location of every session. We've provided a map of the hotel on the back cover to help you find your way, although that should not be a problem here at the Omaha Hilton as all sessions are located along the same corridor. The Index at the back of the Program will make it easy to find your own and others' sessions. Preceding the Index is a list of the names of the Society's elected officers and committee members, as well as some historical information about the MSS. In the middle of the Program you will find the complete session information.

The task of putting together our Society's annual meeting could not be done without the stalwart efforts of literally dozens of people. We were greatly aided by all members of the Board, the 2006 Program Committee, the organizers of the myriad sessions, and, of course, all of the participants who have agreed to attend this year. Jean Karlen, Local Arrangements Chair, could not have worked any harder, could not have been more pleasant, and could not have been more knowledgeable. She assisted us in so many ways, and to the extent to which these meetings are successful, she deserves much of the credit. We were also fortunate to work with the new editor of The Midwest Sociologist, the incomparable Ana Campos, who took our roughly hewn program and magically turned it into the beautiful booklet you are holding. She worked long, arduous hours during her own break to make sure that the Program was produced in a timely and professional manner. In 2005, in its infinite wisdom, the Society decided to hire a full-time Executive Director, Lauren Robinson Tiffany, to take over the administrative reins. There are no adequate words to express how much Lauren helped us; she unselfishly gave her time, brains, and every ounce of energy she had to assist us in the creation of these meetings. In addition, her predecessors, Kent Sandstrom and Linda Evans, were there for us, no matter how seemingly trivial or minute our questions. Our current President, Rob Benford, along with Student Director Geri Hendrix, showed us the ropes and were there 24/7 to help. All of these people do the invisible work of the Society that allows us to be so vibrant. Finally, we would like to thank our departments, and especially chairs, Michael Radelet and Paul Colomy, at the University of Colorado and University of Denver, respectively, who generously gave us the support to put in the time and effort to create this Program.

Organizers/Presenters*Carla B. Howery, American Sociological AssociationJanet Huber Lowry, Austin CollegeDiane L. Pike, Augsburg College*

This workshop will share strategies and rationales for evaluating the learning outcomes of sociology programs, to assess the quality of the major, and identify areas of strength and targets for improvement. The ASA's Task Force on Assessment of the Sociology Major has created a useful manual to assist departments with this important work. All three presenters are members of the Task Force.

Session 71: THEMATIC WORKSHOP: THE ART OF QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH: MODELING CONTEXTUALITY AND HETEROGENEITY USING MULTILEVEL ANALYSIS

1:30PM to 3:15PM

Hill

Organizer*Tim Liao, University of Illinois, Urbana-ChampaignPresenterXavier Escandell, University of Northern Iowa*

Sociological processes frequently operate at many levels reproducing complex structures. For example, individual level outcomes are embedded in larger macro structures (such as within regions and organizations). The advantages of multilevel analysis are that we can simultaneously model these different levels and explore the interactions between them. Multilevel analysis thus improves estimation and yields more substantive operationalization of contextual effects. We will explore the basic tenets of multilevel analysis with a focus on some practical applications within sociology using HLM 6.04.

This workshop is designed to enable and encourage women to discuss issues of concern regarding the chilly climate for women in academe. The panelists represent a cross-section of women in different stages of their careers from a variety of institutions. While the panelists share their experiences, the workshop is also an open forum for questions, comments, and, hopefully, strategies for work environments more supportive of women faculty, staff, and students.

2005-07 COMMITTEES OF THE MIDWEST SOCIOLOGICAL SOCIETY

The Midwest Sociological Society's committees and their members are listed below. The lists include both outgoing and incoming committee members. New committee members begin their service by attending their committee's meeting which takes place at the annual meeting. Outgoing committee members conclude their service at the annual business meeting in the year designated beside their name. The schedule of committee meetings appears in this program, with each committee meeting being designated with a session number. All committee meetings are listed in the front of this book on pages 6-7. If unsure which committee meetings to attend, please find your name in the index at the back of this book, and check the session numbers listed after your name.

MSS/NCSA 2007 ANNUAL MEETING THEME STATEMENT:

Social Policy, Social Ideology, and Social Change

BY HELEN A. MOORE

2007 MSS President-Elect

& JAY WEINSTEIN

2007 NCSA Vice President

In 2007 the Midwest Sociological Society and North Central Sociological Association launch a one-time innovation in bridging our two organizations. As the incoming President-Elect of MSS and the Vice President of NCSA (respectively), Helen Moore and Jay Weinstein will jointly chair our annual conference, to be held on April 4-7 at the Downtown Marriott in Chicago, Illinois. We are honored and delighted to work with our memberships to expand sociological dialogue with our colleagues and students. Both organizations bring a rich history of endeavors, reflecting the full range of methodological, theoretical and substantive approaches to sociological research, teaching, and outreach. Our goal is to continue those important traditions and to link these to the 2007 theme of Social Policy, Social Ideology, and Social Change.

Our strong disciplinary foundations derive from the classical scholars who sought to understand and influence social change. A common feature of early scholarship was the assumption that one ultimate purpose of the discipline was to improve the human condition via the creation of scientifically informed social policy. Support for this doctrine has varied over time, but currently, our professional culture is returning to a stronger policy orientation. The American Sociological Association emphasizes the importance of formulating social policy through Public Briefings and ASA Council

Public Statements and Policy Statements (asanet.org). Both NCSA and MSS have hosted sessions framing social policy discussions with a sense of urgency that contemporary societies require science-based policies in an unprecedented way, perhaps for their very social survival.

If sociologically inspired and informed social policy is needed now as never before, it is equally true that sciences, in general, and social sciences in particular, confront a contemporary political climate of distrust. Sociologists working in policy arenas may promote progressive social change — now with encouragement from our professional organizations — and yet find themselves engaged in ideological debate. This “debate” process is familiar. Intellectuals and organizations that embrace forms of anti-science ideology discredit all forms of critical thinking about contemporary society and its institutions (typified by sociology) as “left-wing” rhetoric. Indeed, to defend their anti-scientific doctrines, some journalists, political leaders, and religious spokespersons have routinely characterized sociologists as “liberals” and/or “Marxists.” Their rhetoric conflates all forms of “ideology” with well-established and widely accepted tenets of sociology. This, in turn, politicizes debates and omits the role of social science investigation in resolving policy differences. One side is simply asserted to be “right” and the other to be “wrong” without reflection.

In selecting Social Policy, Social Ideology, and Social Change as the theme of this joint meeting of MSS and NCSA, we underscore the promise our discipline holds for informing policy that may, in turn, help shape a better social world. At the same time, we recognize the inhospitable ideological climate that policy science encounters today. The methodologies and theories we select for our current research, teaching activities and service outreach involve sociologists at both the margins and the heart of these larger policy debates. The very act of operationalizing research variables such as “race” or “ethnicity” links sociologists to political processes of gerrymandering and cultural processes of “othering.” Research efforts to understand teenage sexuality or corporate crime can be thwarted by bureaucratic barriers. The policy rubrics from “No Child Left Behind” and “Workfare” also shape our communities, shape access to research funding priorities, and frame the questions posed by our students.

Today, as a discipline we engage with themes of social change ranging from the macro-sociology of global economics and social movements, to the day-to-day praxis of social action, interpersonal conflict, and family change. Our research methodologies, pedagogical strategies, and community praxis have fundamental and practical extensions to the realities of social policy and social change. Those scholars who commit their research to progressive social change move along similar disciplinary pathways as those who stand for dispassionate scientific methods.

At every point along this continuum, sociologists are engaged with the social policy/social change dialectic.

It is important for us to reflect on our own status and impact as a discipline, as individual and collaborative researchers, as teachers, and as observers and as participants in the social changes that are occurring around us. The combined 2007 program in Chicago of the Midwest Sociological Society and the North Central Sociological Association provides multiple opportunities to expand these discussions.

We invite you to submit papers that enlarge and illuminate these debates within and about our discipline. All sociologists along the continuum of perspectives and methodologies we represent are welcome to participate in our deliberations on social policy, social ideology, and social change and the relationships among them.

Members of the North Central Association and Midwest Society and all interested individuals are invited to submit formal papers and informal discussion topics on sociological pedagogy, research and praxis. Bring your advances in quantitative analysis, innovations in ethnographic methods, and ways we can reach diverse audiences of policy makers or students more effectively. In the expansive traditions of the North Central and Midwest regional organizations, we welcome contributions across the array of disciplinary concerns. Please submit your papers or session ideas to Helen Moore (hmoore1@unl.edu) for the Midwest sessions. Jay Weinstein will provide additional information and receive papers submitted to the NCSA at jay.weinstein@emich.edu. Also, please visit the NCSA web site at www.ncsanet.org.
